On 10 December 1953, the Artillerie Kaserne in Kuestrin was occupied by about 1,000 troops wearing red-bordered black epaulets, mostly with artillery insignia and, a few, with motor transport insignia. Between 1 and 10 December, an undetermined number of troops daily received instruction on 17 x 37-mm AA guns in the western training area and on 16 x 85-mm AA guns, 4 Pzaso-3 ballistic directors and 1 radar with parabolic reflector in the southeastern training area. Between 1 and 10 December, 200 to 250 troops daily engaged in march practice in the barracks yard. The construction of a new shed and the reconstruction of the former Stable at the parking lot in the wouthwestern section of the installation were being completed during the period under review.

Comment. As this information checks with observations _____ as being November, the Artillerie Kaserne is carried/occupied as previously by a light and a medium regiment of the 32d AAA Div (US).
_____. The radar is a Whiff-type AAA firing device.
